HELEN HUNTER'S HUSBAND

FROM ONE EXTREME TO THE OTHER.

CHAPTER 55.

Jack said no more, knowing he was defeated. Well, so be it! He loved Helen. He could not lose her. He was as sure she had done nothing wrong—yet, as that he himself had been true. But if he continued obdurate how long before Barnes, or someone else, would take his place in her affect, would and commented upon it.

Sickened for quiet hours with his books; Helen waxed merry and gayly told him:

"Don't you see this is like living? Aren't we having a good time?" And fearful of offending he would answer:

It was his duty and all else counted nothing against the loss of her—her love. "Perhaps it will come out all right," he said to himself as he hunted in his pocket for his pipe, his consolation, His thoughts now were bent on humoring his wife as firmly as they had been upon punishing her.

That talk of divorce and the lawyer had brought Jack to terms, Dear old Jack who was so sow and conventional. But she had to do something, or she'd never have any good times. And she dared not let him know that the lawyer was a figment of her own brain; that she had spent the time away from home with an old crony of her mother's to whom she had made no explanation whatever. Helen may have been childism. She undoubtedly was, but with her childishness was also mixe't a cloverness one would not have looked for in her.

Now that they had "made up" she went about as usual—her club, her friends. Jack came home early, and his invariable greeting was a question:

"What would you like to do tonight?"

He hoped against hope that Helen would occasionally say: "Let us spend it at home, reading." But no, if they remained at home it was to entertain a number of Helen's friends, or to play bridge with the Laytons—this if the night were stormy, and others hard to get on the spur of the moment.

Despite the overpowering popularity of the tweed suit there seems to be no let up in the demand for it. For general utility there seems to be nothing pre-sented this season which com-pares with tweed. The bright colors seem to be giving way to the mixtures and darker shades for sport and country wear. Grays, tans, browns and black and white mixtures are popular just now and one sees these shades on the links more often than the vivid hues.

This mannishly tailored suit is distinguished by the one button effect on the coat. It is a brown rough tweed and is designed for sports and general utility. Note the swagger effect obtained by the tailored shirt with its soft collar and four-in-hand tie. A touch of color may be added to the costume by a bright shade in one's chip chin hat of felt like

Answer: The correct size for dinner mapkins is 24 inches after that I will publish one on canning peas—the peas, too, by the Intermittent Cold Pack, for that is the safest way to can asparagus, peas, beans and corn. Thank you for writing me well in advance. I wish my other readers would do the same. If anyone will, for instance, want to know how to dry peaches or apples in the late summer or fall—it is not too early to tell me their wants now! Then I can prepare for such articles in advance.

Two Girls: "Thank you for your printed-up article on "Six Good Home Made Candles." Can you tell me why the chocolate creams sometimes look dull and spotted and too dry after dipping?"

Answer: You have not followed the directions closely enough. The dipping chocolate was too hot, which resulted in speckled and gray-looking candles; on the other hand, if it is too cold, the candles will be streaked. But practice in this, as in everything else, will result in success. Try again, timing yourself by the clock, so that if you succeed once you can heat the chocolate the same number of minutes the next time in the same utensil, on the same part of the range. Sauce pans of various lengths of time to become heated through.

3¼ cups Flour 1 cup Sugar 3 level teaspoons Baking Powder 1/2 cup Kingsford's Corn Starch 1/2 teaspoon Soda 1 teaspoon Salt or Cinnamon 2 tablespoons Karo Iggs 1/2 teaspoon Nutmeg or Cinnamon 4 tablespoons Mazola 1 cup Thick Sour Milk

Sift dry ingredients. Beat eggs light. Add Karo, Mazola, and sour milk. Stir liquids into dry ingredients and add flour to make a soft dough. Roll one-quarter inch thick, cut and fry in hot Mazola. If desired substitute one cup rye flour and add one and a half squares melted chocolate for chocolate crullers.

TT is not necessary to purchase both a bread and pastry flour. By using 1/4 cup of Kingsford's Corn Starch to 1/4 cup of any good flour the percentage of gluten is decreased and the starch content increased so that home prepared flour will make a lighter and finer grained cake.

Keep Pace With Evolution

ARWIN declared that the human race was merely an evolution of the monkey tribe. Some people agree with him. Others do not.

But there is no denying that even within the memory of most of us, there has been considerable of an evolution in the human mode of living. And today, this evolution is buzzing along faster than ever.

There has never been a time when conditions changed so rapidly—when life bettered itself so consistently. New comforts and conveniences are coming in all the time. And the rapidity with which they are invented and put before us vitally affects us all.

To take advantage of these thing, you must keep yourself informed. You must know not only what they are, but also know much they cost and where and how to get them.

The only way you can know this is to be a regular reader of the advertisements.

Advertisements tell of all that the world is doing to make you more comfortable, your work easier, your methods better, your clothing and food problems less irksome. They tell you how you can save time-and effort-and money in the selection of the things that make life worth while.

Advertisements are interesting, instructive and highly profitable to you.
